Founder of the British Institute of Public Health an association mainly composed of medical officers of health or those qualified to be such, and of medical officers of the Royal Navy and of the Army. For the past eight years he has been its President and as such has presided over the largest National Health Congress ever held in London at the close of which he was the recipient at the Mansion House at the hands of the Lord Mayor, of an address and an international presentation of plate. Her Majesty the Queen in 1897 to mark her approval of the great influence for good exerted by the Institute, commanded that it should be called The Royal Institute of Public Health and became its Patron. He has presided over the Institute at Congresses held in Glasgow, Dublin, Hull, Blackpool, Aberdeen, Leamington, and Exeter. As a Manager of the Metropolitan Asylum Board he has taken a prominent part in dealing with the question of infectious hospital provision and infectious disease treatment in London, and as the first Medical Adviser of the School Board he took a noteworthy part in putting all questions of school hygiene upon a proper footing, and has rendered great service in connection with the Special Schools for Feeble minded Children, being one of the Departmental Committee of the Education Department who reported on this subject in 1898. He was Harben Lecturer for 1899, and in 1902 he was awarded the Harben Gold Medal for his 'eminent services to the Public Health', he is Brigade Surgeon Lieut. Colonel to the 4th or City of London Vol Infantry Brigade, and the London Rifle Brigade (1st London), and was one of the Departmental

Committee of the War Office in 1887 which drew up the scheme of Volunteer medical organisation. Publications The Laboratory Text-book of Public Health, editor of the 7th edition of Guy and Ferriar's Forensic Medicine, Diphtheria, etc. He has travelling eyeing Address 74 Great Russell Street Bloomsbury Square, W.C.
